Am I really a Ham Radio Junky?

Your grass is 6 inches high, your car is dirty and its CQP weekend; what do you do? Its your daughter's birthday, you have relatives coming and its the weekend of the 10 meter contest; what to do? You have an opportunity to make some extra money, you have a honey do list a mile long and its WPX weekend; what to do? You've been invited to a BBQ, you have job related work to catch up on; and there is a SCCC meeting this weekend and it will totally wipe out your Saturday; what do you do? We have all been faced with these and other decisions regarding our hobby and its importance in our life. What priorities should be given to what? Is it selfish if I go contest and ignore these other responsibilities? Am I being one way? Does my family think that they are a distant second place to my hobby? Do my friends and relatives think I am anti-social because I spend all my time sitting in front of some electronic device talking to people I have never seen face to face and probably never will? Is it better to develop a lasting friendship with a neighbor or aquantance or to sit at my radio and place in a contest? What good is all this radio stuff doing me? Am I riddling my body with potential cancer causing electro magnetic fields? How much is too much? Am I really anti social? Does my family really hate my hobby? Would they destroy my equipment if they had the chance, just to see me more often? Where are my priorities? Where should my priorities be? Do I really enjoy participating in gruelling weekend contest, going for two days without sleep or rest; and for what? A piece of paper, status among other crazy contest junkies, other anti-social types that are starving for sleep too. What will all these certificates mean when I'm gone? Am I an ego tripper? Do I really care if these other ham radio junkies look up to me? What will my epitaf be? He was a whale of a contester and won many times. Who really cares? What good have I done for others? Have I made a difference in anyones life?

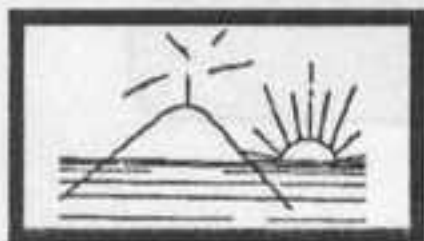

Well Bunky if you have asked these questions of yourself, or had to make these critical decisions in your life, you have gone through the trials and tribulations of most testers. If you are satisfied with your decisions, Don't Worry Be Happy; but if you are not happy; you still have time to change your radio ways. Changing your radio ways will require you to repriortize your activities. Its up to you to balance your life!

Farewell or Hello World? by Ski, N6ADI

Well this is the last issue of SCCCORE compiled and produced by me. I want to thank the club for the opportunity I had to perform this service for the past six plus years. It has made me grow in more ways than I could count. I have forced myself to become proficient at desktop publishing on the computer, which has helped me in my job also. It has taught me alot about people and clubs and the challenges that they all face.. I want to thank all those who have been so kind as to provide me with score gathering inputs for the bulletin, namely N6VR and NE6I. I want to thank Dennis for passing this newsletter on to me in the beginning. I think we all go through cycles in contesting and ham radio and I am in the in-active mode due to my priorities. Good luck to Mark in taking the batton and I am sure that he will learn a great deal about the support the members will give him and maybe even pickup on the desktop publishing tricks. It will be nice not to have to worry about typing, xeroxing, labeling, stapling and stamping every two months! Thanks again and hello world!
